

F 184
.N42
copy 2

Class /

Book /

MARYLAND IN THE BEGINNING:

A BRIEF SUBMITTED TO THE

HISTORICAL AND POLITICAL SCIENCE
ASSOCIATION

OF

JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY.

BY

EDWARD D. NEILL.

May 28 1886.

Deposited

Truth is the daughter of Time.

Qui statuit aliquid, parte imaudita altera,
Æquum licet statuerit, haud æquum fuit.

Deposited

May 28 1886

BALTIMORE
CUSHING AND BAILEY
202 Baltimore Street
1881.

7184, 7142

BY TRANSFER

OCT 20 1915

—
HAROLD GILFILLAN, HARBOR
PRINTERS,
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

TO THE
PRESIDENT, PROFESSORS and Graduate Students
OF
JOHNS HOPKINS UNIVERSITY

Whose researches have thrown light
upon American History,

THIS BRIEF

Is dedicated by One,

Some of whose ancestors, nearly two centuries ago, were planters, and whose father and wife were born and educated in

MARYLAND

MARYLAND IN THE BEGINNING.

I.

THE MARYLAND CHARTER.

Of all the proprietary grants by James the First, and Charles the First, the charter of Maryland was the only one containing a clause restricting the development of Christianity, by requiring all churches and chapels to be erected in accordance with laws of the Church of England.

The charter of Nova Scotia, in favor of William Alexander, Earl of Stirling, A. D. 1621, mentions his desire "for the propagation of the Christian religion," and as Proprietor "his gift and right of patronage of churches, chapels, and benefices."

The charter of Barbadoes was given in A. D. 1627 to the Earl of Carlisle, who had a laudable and pious design of propagating the Christian religion with the privileges of the Bishop of Durham in the kingdom of England.

The charter of Carolana in A. D. 1629 was sealed to Attorney-General Heath, "excited with a laudable zeal for the propagation of the Christian faith" and with "privileges of the Bishop of Durham."

The charter of Avalon¹ A. D. 1623 granted to Sir

¹ Gardiner in his "Charles the First, from 1628-1637," erroneously mentions that the charter of Maryland was copied word for word from Avalon.

George Calvert, then principal Secretary of State, has the same language, as those mentioned, as to the desire to propagate Christianity, and also gives the privileges of any Bishop of Durham within the bishoprick or County Palatine of Durham," and "the patronages and advowsons of all churches which, as Christian religion shall increase within the said region, isles, and limits, shall happen to be erected."

The charter of Maryland granted to Cecil Calvert, Baron of Baltimore, and confirmed on the 25th of June, 1632, conferred to the Proprietor the privileges of a Bishop of Durham, and the patronage and advowsons of all churches, but contained a clause not in the others, which reads "together with license and faculty of erecting and founding churches, chapels and places of worship, in convenient and suitable places within the premises, and causing the same to be dedicated and consecrated according to the ecclesiastical laws of our kingdom of England."

Sir Edward Northey, Attorney General of England, having been asked as to the force of this clause, wrote: "As to the said clause in the grant of the province of Maryland, I am of opinion, the same doth not give him power to do anything contrary to the ecclesiastical laws of England."¹

A fellow of All Souls College, Oxford, J. A. Doyle in his English Colonies in America, on page 281, of the edition published in 1882 by Henry Holt and Com-

¹ "Opinions on interesting subjects of public laws, etc., London, 1781."

Chalmers, the compiler of this volume, educated at Aberdeen, Scotland, came to Maryland and practiced law, but after the Declaration of Independence by the Colonies, he went to London, and was for years a Clerk of the Board of Trade.

pany, New York, in discussing the Maryland Charter, writes: "It made Baltimore in his proprietary character almost independent of the Crown. The only limitation to this was a clause, requiring that all churches and places of worship should be dedicated according to the ecclesiastical laws of the Church of England. That Baltimore should have accepted this clause is significant, as it quite dispels the idea that he intended his colony as a special refuge for his own sect, a stronghold for persecuted Romanism."

II.

EMBARKATION OF COLONISTS.

George Calvert, the first Lord Baltimore, was not a rich man when he died in A. D. 1632, and after the Charter of Maryland was issued to his son Cecil, the second lord, some time elapsed, before, the latter could obtain the assistance of those who had means, to unite with him in sending out a colony. In a letter of Cecil, Lord Baltimore, to Thomas, Earl of Strafford¹ written on the 10th of January, 1633 (O. S.) from Odiham, he uses this explicit language: "I have, as I said, at last, by the help of some of your Lordship's good friends, and mine, overcome these difficulties, and sent a hopeful colony into Maryland, with a fair and probable expectation of good success, however, without danger of any great prejudice unto myself,¹ in respect that many others are joined with me in the adventure."

¹ "Letters and dispatches of Thomas, Earl of Stafford," Dublin, 1740, Vol. I., p. 178.

During the month of July, 1633, a ship of about 350 tons burden, called the "Ark of Maryland," with a crew of "about forty men," had been engaged to carry the first colonists.² Several weeks elapsed before the emigrants were ready, and after the "Ark" with a pinnace of twenty tons named the "Dove," had fallen down the Thames, a rumor spread that there were some on board who had not taken the oath of allegiance, and on the 19th of October, Coke, the Secretary of State, informed Admiral Penington, "that the Ark, Richard Lowe, Master, carrying men for his new plantation in or about New England, had sailed from Gravesend contrary to orders, the company in charge of Capt. Winters, not having taken the oath of allegiance." In consequence of this information Edward Watkins, the London searcher, was sent after them, and going on board the ship and pinnace, offered the oath of allegiance to about one hundred and twenty-eight persons, some, who had been on board, having forsaken the ships.³ This was on the 25th of October, and some days elapsed before the ships left.

Lord Baltimore, in the same letter to the Earl of Strafford which has already been quoted, gives the following version of the stoppage of the ship and pinnacle. He writes: "After many difficulties since your Lordship's departure from hence, in the proceedings of my plantation wherein I felt your Lordship's absence, I have at last sent away my ships, and have deferred my own going till another time; and indeed, my Lord, it is not one of the least reasons of my stay at this time, the great desire I had to wait for your Lordship in that kingdom [Ireland], which I must confess my own affections importuned me to, when you went from hence, and I should have done it, had I been at liberty, but as I said, my Lord, my ships are gone, after having been in so many ways troubled by my adversaries, after they had endeavored to overthrow my business at the Council-board, after they had informed by several means, some of the Lords of the Council that I intended to carry over nuns into Spain, and soldiers to serve that King, which I believe your Lordship will laugh at as well as they did, after they had gotten the Attorney General to make an information in the Star Chamber that my ships were departed from Gravesend without any cockets from the custom-house, and in contempt of all authority, my people abusing the King's officers and refusing to take the oath of allegiance, whereupon their Lordships sent present orders to several captains of the King's ships who lay in the Downs, to search for my ships in the river, and to follow them into the narrow seas if they were gone out, and to bring them back to Gravesend, which they did, and all this done before I knew anything of it, but imagined that my ships were all well advanced on their voyage. But, not to trouble your Lordship with too many circumstances. I, as soon as I had notice of it, made it plainly appear unto their Lordships that the Attorney was abused and ill-informed, and that there was not any just cause of complaint in any of the former accusations, and that every one of them were most notoriously and maliciously false; whereupon they were pleased to restore my ships to their former liberty."

¹ As late as February 17, 1639, 40 Earl Arundel of Wardour, wrote to Windesbank, one of the Secretaries of the King: "My son Baltimore is brought so low with his setting forward the plantations of Maryland, with the claims, lawsuits, and oppressions which he has met with in that business, that I do not see how he could subsist, if I did not give him diet for his wife, children, and servants," Cal. State Papers."

² For order of the Privy Council relative to this vessel, see Neill's Founders of Maryland, Munsell, Albany, 1876, page 59.

³ The report of Watkins is published in Founders of Maryland, page 61.

It was not, however, notoriously and maliciously false that he had made arrangements to put on board those who could not take the oath of allegiance.

As soon as he obtained the grant of Maryland he had secretly provided for sending Jesuits into the colony. Henry More, Vice Provincial of the Jesuits writes: "The said Baron [Baltimore] immediately treated with Father Richard Blount, at that time Provincial, at the same time writing to Father General, earnestly begging that he would select certain Fathers as well for confirming the Catholics in their faith, and converting the heretics who were destined to colonize that country, as also for propagating the faith amongst infidel savages." The Jesuit Fathers are supposed to have joined the ships at the Isle of Wight.¹

In the "Relation of the Lord Baltimore's Plantation," issued by the Proprietor in 1635, there is a most excellent statement as to the beginning of the Province in the following language: "His Most Excellent Majesty having by his letters patent under the great seale of England granted a certain country in America, now called Maryland, in honor of our gracious Queen, unto the Lord Baltimore, with divers privileges and encouragements to those that should adventure with his Lordship in the Plantation of that country; the benefits and honors of such an action was readily apprehended by divers gentlemen of good birth and qualitie, who thereupon resolved to adventure their persons and a good part of their fortunes with his Lordship in the pursuit of so noble, and in all likelihood so advantageous, an enterprize. The Lord was at first resolved to go in person, but more important reasons persuading his stay at home¹, he appointed his brother, Mr. Leonard Calvert, to go as Governor in his stead, with whom he joined in commission Mr. Jerome Hawley and Mr. Thomas Cornwallis, two worthy and able gentlemen.

¹ "Records of the English Province of Jesuits," by Henry Foley, S. J., Vol. 3.

"These, with the other gentlemen adventurers and their servants to the number of near 200 people,² embarked themselves for the voyage in the good ship called the Ark of 300 tunne and upward, which was attended by his Lordship's pinnace called the Dove of about 50 tunne."

On Friday, the 22d of November, 1633, the expedition sailed from the Isle of Wight.

¹ Cardinal Manning in reply to Gladstone makes the following inaccurate statements: "Lord Baltimore, who had been Secretary of State under James I., in 1633, emigrated to the American plantations."

² Near two hundred people is a correct statement. In a hurried letter to the Earl of Strafford, Baltimore makes the number three hundred.

In an elaborate essay published in 1885, by the Maryland Historical Society, on "The Foundation of Maryland," by Bradley T. Johnson, it is assumed that only one hundred and twenty-eight colonists left the Thames, because one month before they sailed from the Isle of Wight, there happened to be one hundred and twenty-eight on board at Gravesend. After October 25th, 1633, when the oath of allegiance was administered, it was possible for others to have come on board before the vessel went to sea. It is also assumed that the remainder of the near two hundred came on board at the Isle of Wight. For this statement I can find no proof. Lord Baltimore writes that two of his brothers "with very near twenty other gentlemen of very good fashion," were in the first expedition. Mr. Johnson makes the gentlemen twenty, besides Leonard Calvert, Cornwallis, and Hawley, in all twenty-three, including the three Jesuits. There were, in fact, when the expedition sailed from the Isle of Wight, but twenty in all. One of these, Fairfax, and perhaps others, died on the voyage.

III.

FAITH OF THE COLONISTS.

More than three-fourths of the colonists were not in sympathy with the Church of Rome, and the gentlemen of most influence in the early Maryland settlement were all decided adherents to the Church of England. The Jesuit Fathers are emphatic on this point. In a communication supposed to have been written by Father White to his Superior, the opening sentence is in these words: "In a country like this, newly planted, and depending wholly upon England for its subsistence, where there is not, nor can be, until England is re-united to the Church, any ecclesiastical discipline established by laws of the Province, or granted by the Prince, nor Provincial Synod held, nor Spiritual Courts created, nor the canon laws accepted, nor ordinary or other ecclesiastical persons admitted as such, nor the Catholic Religion publicly allowed. And whereas three parts of four, at least, are heretics, I desire to be resolved."

In the important Assembly which met on the 25th of January, 1637, O. S., there were only a few adherents of the Church of Rome. Father More in a memorial laid before the Sacred Congregation for the Propagation of the Faith, writes: "For since the said Baron was unable to govern Maryland in person he appointed as his substitute a certain Mr. Lewger¹ his Secretary, who was formerly a minister and preacher, and being converted to the faith, retained yet much of the leaven of heresy, for he still maintained those dogmas so justly offensive to Catholic ears, that no external jurisdiction was given by God to the Supreme Pontiff, but merely an internal one, in foro conscientie."

¹ Lewger was a college friend of Lord Baltimore. A notice of him will be found in "Terra Maria" J. B. Lippincott & Co., Philadelphia, 1867. Also in "English Colonization of America" Strahan & Co., London, 1871, and "Founders of Maryland" Joel Munsell, Albany, 1876.

After specifying some other propositions advanced by Mr. Lewger, Father More used this language: "Therefore this Secretary having summoned the Parliament in Maryland, composed with few exceptions of heretics, and presided over by himself, in the name of the Lord Baltimore himself, he attempted to pass * * * laws repugnant to the Catholic faith and Ecclesiastical immunities."¹

Gerard, a young man of twenty years of age, whose family in England sympathized with the Church of Rome, in about twelve months returned home.² The young brothers of Sir John Winter lived but two or three years. Every one of the original twenty, except the three Jesuits, of whom we know anything, who had intelligence and force of character and settled in the Province was not a Roman Catholic. Father More writes to the

¹ Lewger was the first Secretary of the Province, and received all papers. As Governor Calvert was obliged to be absent during a portion of the session he issued a commission of which the following is an extract: "I have authorized and deputed and do hereby appoint, authorize and depute Mr. John Lewger, Secretary, in my name and place, to hold and continue the said Assembly at the day appointed and give service for me; also to adjourn and dismiss the Assembly."

² "Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus," Vol. 3, p. 262. See also an article "Light upon the Early History of Maryland," Pennsylvania Historical Society Magazine, Vol. 5, 1881, page 51.

³ Richard, brother of Sir William Gerard Bl., in 1635, returned to England, raised a company of foot, and went into the service of Spain in the low countries. He visited Queen Henrietta Maria, of England, at the Hague, who commissioned him as Lt.-Colonel during the civil war to raise troops. He then joined Charles the First at Oxford, and in the attack of Burton on Trent, was severely wounded. He went with the King to Hurst Castle, and bore his last message to the Queen. After the restoration he became cup-bearer to the Queen Mother, and died at Hucc, Sept. 5, 1686.

Propaganda at Rome, in a Memorial, which is in the third volume of the Records of the English Jesuits, edited by Foley, that the Jesuits in Maryland cannot expect "sustenance from heretics hostile to the faith, nor from the Catholics, who are for the most part poor." And yet Mr. Bradley T. Johnson, in his paper on the "Foundation of Maryland," published by the Maryland Historical Society, makes the following statement:

"The first colony was numerically Protestant; politically, socially, and religiously it was Roman Catholic.¹ The physical power was Protestant; the intellectual and moral and political control was Roman Catholic."

IV.

ARRIVAL IN MARYLAND.

Governor Calvert was kindly received at Point Comfort by Governor Harvey, of Virginia, and he offered him "as much brick and tiles as he should have occasion to employ until he made his own."²

Captain Newport in A. D. 1607, at an island at the foot of the Falls of the James River planted a cross, and took possession of Virginia in the name of King James, and on March 25th, 1634, upon Saint Clement's island in the Potomac River, Governor Calvert planted a cross. "The Relation of Maryland" published¹ in 1634, thus describes the ceremony: "We all kneeled down and said certain prayers, taking possession of the country for our Saviour, and the King of England." Father White gives a fuller account.

¹ Schaff, in his History of Maryland writes as if he had not seen the Jesuit statement as to the overwhelming majority of Protestants in the first Colony, and also that of the Bishop of London in 1576: "Those of the Romish belief who, 'tis conjectured, do not amount to one of a hundred of the people."

² Many old houses in Maryland and Virginia are erroneously supposed to have been built of brick brought from England.

Leaving the "Ark" at the island, Governor Calvert in the pinnace "Dove," ascended the river as far as the Indian village "Paschatoway." After a brief visit he returned, and then he went to a tributary of the Potomac which was called Saint George, and the colonists went up this stream "about four leagues." Captain Henry Fleet, a Protestant of Virginia, "a man especially acceptable to the savages, well versed in their language, and acquainted with the country, pointed out to the Governor a spot so charming in its situation that Europe itself can scarcely show one to surpass it," which was the Indian village of Yoacomoco, and here Calvert and party located and named the place Saint Mary.

¹ The first work on the Province of Maryland had this title: "A relation of the successful beginnings of the Lord Baltimore's Plantation in Mary Land: being an extract of Certain Letters written from thence, and by some of The Adventurers to Their Friends in England.

Anno Domini 1634."

This little book was reprinted by Joel Munsell, Albany, in 1865

The next year another book appeared, called:

A RELATION
of Maryland,
Together

With { A Map of the Country,
The Conditions of Plantations,
His Majestic's Charter to the Lord Baltimore,
Translated in English.

These bookes are to be had at Master William Peasley, Esq., his house on the back side of Drury Lane, neere the Cock Pit Playhouse; or in his absence, at Master John Morgan's house in High Holborne, over against the Dolphin, London.

September the 8, Anno Dom, 1634."

This was reprinted by Joseph Sabin, New York, in 1865.

THE FIRST COMMISSIONERS.

THOMAS CORNWALLIS.

Lord Baltimore prudently associated Thomas Cornwallis and Jerome Hawley with his brother Leonard Calvert in the first government of the Province. Governor Calvert never exhibited any executive ability. George Evelyn, who knew the family, once said: "What was Leonard Calvert himself at school but a dunce and blockhead; and now it has come to this, that such a fellow must be Governor of a Province and assumes such lordly airs."¹ Obstinacy in public affairs, want of thrift, and subserviency to the strong minded Margaret Brent, did not add to his popularity. His nuncupative will as recorded at Annapolis, betrays poverty of mind and poverty in this world's goods.² Without the presence of Thomas Cornwallis there would have been great confusion in public affairs, and the colony might have failed. He was the foremost man in "intellectual and moral and political" matters.

His ancestors for many generations had occupied positions of distinction in England.³ His grand-

¹ Streeter's "First Commander of Kent Island," page 6.

² An abstract is in "Founders of Maryland," page 66. He leaves his cloth suit of clothes to Richard Willam, a servant, his black suit to another servant, James Lindsay. To Margaret Brent he said: "I make you my sole executor. Take all and pay all."

³ In the days of Richard the Second, an ancestor, Thomas Cornwallis, was a merchant in London. His great-grandson, Sir Thomas, was recalled before the taking of Calais and in Queen Mary's time built Brome Hall in Suffolk. The following pasquinades appeared in his time.

"Who built Brome Hall? Sir Thomas Cornwallis.

How did he build it? By selling of Calais."

Another was:

"Sir Thomas Cornwallis what got you for Calais?

Brome Hall, Brome Hall as large as a palace."

Sheriff Thomas Cornwallis of London, A. D. 1378, was also an ancestor of Lord Cornwallis who surrendered at Yorktown. See Correspondence of Marquis Cornwallis, Vol. 1, London, 1869.

father Sir Charles Cornwallis, the second son of Sir Thomas Cornwallis, Kt., Comptroller of the Household of Queen Mary, was knighted by James the First, and in A. D. 1603, sent as Ambassador to Spain. A Jesuit Father in a letter preserved in the "Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus," writes of "Sir William Cornwallis who married the daughter of Baron Latimer,¹ and his brother Charles, who are not Catholics."

Upon his return from Spain, Sir Charles was made Treasurer of the Household of Prince Henry, and subsequently wrote a book which was published in 1641, with the title "The Life and Death of Henry, Prince of Wales."

The father of the Maryland Commissioner,² Sir William Cornwallis, Knight, of Brome, Suffolk, was distinguished for his virtues and talents, and for his literary essays.

When Cornwallis embarked for America, he was about thirty-three years of age, and his partner in business, John Saunders, was a fellow passenger, who died soon after his arrival in Maryland.

In defending the Province from the aggressions of Virginia traders and the incursions of the savages he was always the leader, and a publication of that period³ described him as "that noble, right

¹ His wife Lucy was the third daughter of John Neville, Lord Latimer, Visitation of Nottinghamshire."

² His mother was Catherine, the daughter of Sir Philip Parker, of Erwarton, Suffolk. His uncle Thomas married Anna, daughter of Samuel Bevercott, the predecessor of William Brewster, the leader of the Plymouth Colony as Postmaster at Scrooby.

³ Sir William Cornwallis, the younger, was the author of the following works:

"Essays," London, 1600.

"Discourses upon Seneca, the tragedian," 1601

"Union of England and Scotland," 1601

"Essays upon Sadness and Julian the Apostate," 1616.

"Praise of King Richard," 1617.

⁴ Nova Albion.

valiant, and politic soldier." In commercial affairs he was at the head and was recognized as the wealthiest man in the settlement. In an assessment of taxables of St. Mary in 1641, for 806 pounds of tobacco, the amount levied upon him was one-fourth, 200 pounds, and the next largest levy was for 50 pounds. Among the unprinted records of Maryland there is this description of his surroundings in his own language: "By God's blessing upon his endeavors he had acquired a settled and comfortable subsistence, having a comfortable dwelling-house furnished with plate, fine hangings, bedding, brass, pewter, and all manner of household stuff, worth altogether a thousand pounds, about twenty servants, at least a hundred head of cattle, a great stock of swine and goats, some sheep and horses, a new pinnace about twenty tons, well rigged and fitted, besides a new shallop and other small boats."

In the legislature he was ever watchful that there was no encroachment upon the liberties granted by Magna Charta, by the Proprietor or his representative, Leonard Calvert, the Governor of the Province.

The first legislature of whose proceedings we have any record is that which assembled in January, 1637, O. S., 1638 N. S., and in this Cornwallis was the master spirit. While Governor Calvert ever narrow and impolitic declared that the Assembly had no power to frame laws, the members proceeded to appoint a committee of five on legislation. Cornwallis received fifty-four votes, and George

¹ Johnson's 'Foundation of Maryland,' page 168.

Evelyn forty-eight votes, while Governor Calvert had only thirty-eight. From the proceedings of the Assembly, the following is taken. "On the 8th day of February between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, the House "being sat" the President [Calvert] declared that he thought it fit to adjourn the house for a longer time, till the laws which they would propound to the Lord Proprietor were made ready.

"Captain Cornwaleys replied they could not spend their time in any business better than this, for the country's good, and one of the planters demanded the reason, why it should be adjourned, and said they were willing to leave the other business to attend to it."

The President replied he would be accountable to no man for adjourning it. After a committee of three was appointed on motion of Cornwallis, consisting of Evelyn, himself, and Governor Calvert, there was an adjournment until the 26th of the month. When that day arrived, the Assembly was adjourned to the 6th of March, and then again until the 12th, when the session was resumed, and twenty bills prepared by the Committee were read for the first time. The next day fourteen other bills had their first reading. Among the bills passed, during this month, was a Bill creating General Assemblies, which provided that "The Lieutenant General and Secretary, or his Deputy, and gentlemen summoned by special writ, and near two burgesses out of every hundred, at the choice of the freemen, at any time hereafter assembled, shall be judged a General Assembly."

1 Gov. Sharpe in "American Magazine" of 1758, p. 265.

Doyle commenting upon the proceedings of this Assembly writes¹: "Apart from the intrinsic merits or demerits of the proposed laws, it was clearly a most serious question whether the initiative in legislation was to belong to the Proprietor or the colonists. The division which followed illustrated forcibly the evils of the proxy system. The acts intended by the Proprietors were rejected by thirty-seven votes to eighteen. Doubtless there were proxies on both sides, but in the minority twelve of them were in two hands those of the Governor, and of Counsellor Sawyer [Lewger] who had been lately associated with Hawley and Cornwallis. No better illustration could have been found of the progress of the liberty of the colony involved in its anomalous system. * * * * *

Baltimore's motives throughout the whole of these affairs, as indeed throughout his career, are hard to be understood. He seemed first to have asserted a claim to holding practically almost absolute power, then, without any apparent reasons, to have abandoned this position, and in a temperate letter empowered his brother as Governor to assent to such laws as should be concerted with and approved of by the freemen and their deputies." This assent was subsequently to be ratified by the Proprietor himself.

Under the call of the Governor a new Assembly convened on the 25th February, 1638 and the first Maryland code was enacted by it, and approved by Lord Baltimore.

¹ Doyle, page 289.

From the days of the obtaining of the Magna Charta, it had been the custom of Parliament upon the inauguration of a new government to declare at the outset that Holy Church shall have her liberties. Upon the accession of Edward the First to the throne, it was enacted A. D. 1297, that "the Church of England shall be free and shall have all her rights and liberties inviolable." When the second Edward assumed the reins of government, it was enacted, A. D. 1311, "That the Holy Church should have all her franchises in such sort as she ought to have." When the third Edward came into power the Parliament of A. D. 1340, declared that "Holy Church shall have her liberties and quietness." As soon as second Richard entered upon his reign it was again declared that "Holy Church shall have and enjoy all her liberties, wholly and without blemish." In A. D. 1399, when Henry the Fourth had succeeded to the throne, it was enacted that Holy Church should have "her rights entirely and without imblemishing." So the same language is used at the beginning of successive reigns.

In the Acts passed by the Parliaments in the time of Henry the Eighth, the Holy Church is distinguished from what is called in the statutes "the See of Rome." The laws in the time of King James make a distinction between the "religion established in this realm," and "the pretended authority of the See of Rome." Cornwallis the guiding mind of Maryland, was descended from statesmen, and his father's house when he was a youth had been frequented by scholars, and when a code, in 1638-9, was to be framed for the Province of Maryland, he would naturally insist upon venerable precedents, and with his fellow members declare that "Holy Church within this Province shall have all her rights and liberties," having in mind the Church alluded to in the Charter, the Church of England, by whose forms all churches and chapels are to be dedicated to public worship.¹

As the differences increased between Charles the First and Parliament, party lines began to be clearly drawn between the Proprietor and the people of the Province. Governor Calvert sympathized with the King, and Cornwallis with the Parliament party. During the year 1640 the latter visited England, and in December, 1641, returned in a ship commanded by Captain Richard Ingle with whom he was, at that time, on friendly terms.

By order of the Lord Baltimore, there was a reorganization of the Maryland government in 1642, and Cornwallis was named as Councillor, but when on the 16th day of September, the commission was tendered "he absolutely refused to be in commission or to take the oath" probably because it omitted the clause of the old form, "saving, my allegiance to the Crown of England."

In October, 1643, Charles the First, then at Oxford, gave to Governor Calvert, then in England, a letter of marque to seize upon all ships belonging to London. Late in that year Captain Richard Ingle, of

¹ It is quite remarkable that the scholarly Gardiner in "History of Charles the First, 1628 to 1637" should state that the term Holy Church was never applied to the Church of England. In the writ for burning Legate in A. D. 1622, King James calls the Church of England the "Holy Mother Church" and also uses these words: "Now therefore as a zealot of justice and a defendant of the Catholic faith and willing to maintain and defend the Holy Church and the rights and liberties of the same."

London, with a commission from Parliament, arrived in Maryland waters, and for words spoken about the King, in discussion, concerning his differences with Parliament, he was arrested, in the absence of Calvert, by Deputy Governor Brent, for treason, and his goods and ships seized.

Cornwallis out of affection for Parliament found means to free Ingle and restore to him his ship and goods. For this manifestation of sympathy he was fined and "paid the highest sum that could be laid upon him," and then embarked with Ingle for England.¹

In August, 1644, Parliament commissioned the Reformation, Captain Ingle, to cruise in the Chesapeake Bay and its tributaries, and Cornwallis who was still in England entrusted him with goods to the value of two hundred pounds.

In February, 1645, Ingle appeared at the mouth of St. Inigo's Creek, Maryland, and there was a general uprising in favor of Parliament by the servants of the absent Cornwallis, and Ingle allowed his house to be plundered of plate and furniture to the amount of £1000, and cattle, a shallop and pinnace, worth twice as much more was seized.²

Governor Calvert was obliged to flee into Virginia, and the Jesuit Fathers, White and Fisher, were brought to England, as prisoners, by Ingle. To shelter himself from the common law and hold the goods, Ingle reported Cornwallis as an enemy of the Commonwealth. After a full examination, Cornwallis was allowed a commission for the examination of witnesses in Maryland, and to prevent this, Ingle caused him to be arrested and imprisoned upon two feigned oaths, but Cornwallis was soon released by his friends. By false allegations, Ingle now obtained an order to stop proceedings at law, till matters mentioned in his petition were determined. Cornwallis¹ after attending the House of Lords for several days, with counsel on the 24th of February, 1645-6 asked "that the case might be speedily heard by them, or else that he might be left at liberty to try his action at law." The case dragged its slow length along for several months, but in September, 1647, the matter was compromised by Ingle appointing Cornwallis his attorney to attach certain moneys due in Virginia and Maryland, which were to be applied to the settlement of the claim of the latter.

¹ Proceedings of House of Lords in 6th Report of Parliament Historical Commission.

² See Maryland MSS.

For eight years Cornwallis attended to business in England, and in 1652 returned to Maryland, now under control of the friends of Parliament, to demand compensation for injuries done to his property. In a Memorial to the Assembly he used these words: "It is well known, he hath at his great cost and charges, from the first planting of this Province for the space of twenty-eight years, been one of the greatest propagators and increasers thereof, by the yearly transportation of servants, whereof divers have been of very good rank and quality, towards whom and the rest he hath always been so careful to discharge a good conscience, in the true performance of his promise and obligations, that he was never taxed with any breach thereof, though it is also well known, and he doth truly own it, that the charge of so great a family as he hath always maintained was never defrayed by their labor."¹

¹ Streeter in "Maryland Papers," page 190, erroneously writes: "I infer therefore that during this period he was engaged in improving his plantation in St. Mary County, still known as Cornwaleys' Neck."

This year he made a contract with Cornelius Canada, brickmaker, and former servant of Governor Green, to deliver thirty-six thousand sound, well-burned bricks before a certain day in June, 1653, and another twenty-four thousand before the 24th of June, 1654. In the year 1654 he again visited England, and was married about 1657 to Penelope, a daughter of John Wiseman, of Middle Temple, and Tyrrel's in County Essex. In 1658, with his young wife, he paid a visit to Maryland, but early in 1659 he left never to return. His affairs in the Province were entrusted to an attorney, and he began to be designated as a "merchant of London." As age advanced he retired to Burnham Thorpe. His will is dated January 2d, 1675-6 and was proved on the 4th of the next March. He left four sons and two daughters, and his second son, Thomas, born in 1662, was a clergyman of the Church of England.²

COMMISSIONER JEROME HAWLEY.

Commissioner Jerome Hawley resided but a short time in the Province. He belonged to a family that had long been connected with the Parish of Brentford in County Middlesex, England. In the time of Queen Elizabeth a Jerome Hawley had a freehold there, and James the First granted the profits of a market there,¹ to James Hawley, whose privilege was afterwards sold to one Sanders, who in 1638 died.²

¹ Maryland MSS. quoted in "Founders of Maryland," Munsell, 1876.

² "Founders of Maryland," page 81.

The Commissioner had three brothers, James,³ Henry and William. Henry was long identified with the colonization of the Western continent. As early as 1628 he visited the Barbadoes of which the Puritan Earl of Warwick was Proprietor, and in 1629 succeeded Sir William Tufton as Governor. In 1632 he caused Tufton to be shot, and was recalled home, and was in England when the Calvert expedition sailed, and he returned to Barbadoes in less than two weeks after it settled at Saint Mary.

He frequently visited England after this, and during his absence in 1639 his brother William acted as Governor. He lived until after the restoration of Charles the Second, and in 1666 was one of the Council of Barbadoes. William Hawley some time after 1640, came to Maryland, and was in 1650, one of the signers of the Protestant Declaration.

Jerome Hawley, the Commissioner, had been a sewer, or superintendent of meals of Queen Henrietta Maria. After living in Maryland about a year he returned to England, and in June, 1635, was in London and wrote to Secretary Windebank that he would go to court with him on the next Sunday. On the 11th of December, he was before the Privy Council, at which Archbishop Laud was present, and to the question whether he had ever said that it was designed "to plant in Maryland the Romish religion" he "utterly denied."¹

¹ Lyson's "London and Environs."

² Perhaps the partner of Cornwallis.

³ James resided at Brentford. Over the north gallery of St. Lawrence Church there is a monument to James Hawley, who died in 1667. Lyson.

On the 29th of February, 1635-6, a warrant was issued loaning the "Black George," a government vessel, to Hawley, and Governor Harvey of Virginia, they to provide the crew and pay the wages. There were many delays in loading the ship, and on the 9th of August Lord Wimbledon, from Portsmouth, wrote to Secretary Windebank that Governor Harvey was still in London and he was "sorry to see so many persons on a journey of such charge, and spending their victuals and money so unnecessarily, for they have been here a month." And he added that he "did not wonder that such journeys of our nation did not prosper." The "Black George" was yet in port on the 11th of November, and Hawley objected to the disturbance of his goods in the hold in order that there might be a search for a leak. The leakage continued to increase so that the vessel at last had to be abandoned, and Harvey, Hawley and their associates were obliged to pay and discharge the crew.

During the winter of 1637, Hawley remained in England, and the King was induced to appoint him² to the office of Treasurer of Virginia, which had been vacant since the dissolution of the Virginia Company, and Governor Harvey was instructed to see that he took the oath of allegiance. He sailed in the ship Friendship, and took some toils to catch

¹ Cal. State Papers, Dom. Series."

² About the same time Gabriel Hawley, who might have been a brother, and the same Gabriel who petitioned the East India Company in 1624 to be employed as steward's mate on the "Eagle" and the person who superintended the shipping of the Maryland colonists in 1633, was appointed Surveyor General of Virginia, and soon died.

deer' which he had promised to send to the King.

Arriving in Virginia "late in the year" of 1637 O. S. early in 1638 N. S., he entered upon the duties of his office. Soon after, in the month of February, 1638, although a councilor of Virginia, he visited Maryland, and one day sat as a member of the Assembly. A citizen of Jamestown wrote to his brother, a clerk of Secretary Windebank under date of the 26th of February, 1637-38, "Mr Hawley has not proven the man he took him for, having neither given satisfaction for money received of him, nor brought him any servants," and that he was then on a visit to Maryland.² A letter of Hawley written on the 8th of May 1638 is extant³ relative to the arrival of ships from Sweden at Jamestown. During the month of August, this year, he died, and Cornwallis, his fellow Maryland Commissioner, was the administrator of his estate.

VI.

LEADING MEN IN THE BEGINNING.

JUSTINIAN SNOW.

Justinian Snow came to Maryland with Governor Calvert, in the responsible position of commercial agent for Lord Baltimore, and in 1639 died. In the Relation of Father White is the narrative of an Indian chief, Tayac, who said "That his father, deceased some time before, appeared to be present before his eyes, accompanied by a god of a black color, whom he worshipped, beseeching him that he would not desert him. At a short distance, a hideous demon, with a certain Snow, an obstinate heretic from England, and at length, in another part, the Governor of the Colony and Father White appeared, a God also being his companion, but much more beautiful, who excelled the unstained snow in whiteness, seeming gently to beckon the King to him. From that time, he treated both the Governor and Father with the greatest affection."

¹ The deer were shared, and four placed upon Capt. Jerry Blackman's ship, in wooden cages, but they died before reaching England. "Sainsbury Calendar."

² "Sainsbury Calendar Colonial."

³ Hawley's letter in "N. Y. Col. Documents," Vol. III.

Snow's brother, Marmaduke, followed him to the Province, and was with him, in 1638, a member of the Assembly. Another brother, Abel, was clerk in the Chancery Office, London. His sister, Susanna, was the wife of Surgeon Thomas Gerard, whose name often appears in the Maryland Records.

HENRY FLEET.

Henry, Fleet years before the charter of Maryland was granted, traded with the Indians of the Potomac River.

In the Fall of 1621 the ship Warwick and pinnace Tiger, sailed from the Thames with supplies, and thirty-eight young women selected with care, as wives for Virginia planters. The Tiger afterward went with twenty-one men up the Potomac to trade with the Indians for corn, and in 1622 erected a stockade at Potomac Creek. While among the Anacostans, who lived on or near the site of the city of Washington, on the 23d day of March, 1623, they were attacked, and Fleet and others captured.¹ After living with the Indians about four years he returned to England,² and was engaged by William Clobery of London in September 1629, to sail in the ship Paramour. On the 4th of July, 1631, he again left London in the ship Warwick owned by Griffith and Company, as their factor. Toward the last of October he was in Yoacomoco where he had lived with the Indians, purchasing corn, which he carried to New England. Winthrop in his journal under March 24, 1631-2, writes: "The bark Warwick arrived at Natescua, having been at Piscataquaek and Salem to sell corn which is brought from Virginia," and under date of April 9, 1632 he makes this entry: "The bark Warwick and Mr. Maverick's pinnace went out toward Virginia."

On the 13th of May, 1632, Capt. Fleet³ arrived at Captain William Clayborne's in Accomac, where he stayed three days, and then accompanied by Clayborne crossed the Chesapeake. After visiting Yoacomoco, he sailed up the Potomac to the Indian village, in what is now Strafford County, Virginia, and on the 1st of June sent back the pinnace of twenty tons with a cargo of corn, and on the 27th he was anchored near the great Falls of the Potomac. After this he formed a partnership for trading with Governor Harvey of Virginia, and through him, he made the acquaintance of Governor Calvert and selected a site for his colony. Six weeks after the town of Saint Mary was named, on the 9th of May, 1634, there was assigned to Fleet two thousand acres on St. George's River, St. George's Hundred, subsequently known as the Manor of West Saint Mary.

¹ Letter of Edward Hill to his brother John Hill, mercer in Lombard Street. Appendix to Eighth Report "Hist. Commission," p. 41.

² See a notice of Fleet in "Founders of Maryland," pp. 9-18, and his journal of a voyage in the "Warwick," pp. 19-37. Some writers, following a typographical error in a caption of the "Founders of Maryland," call the vessel "Virginia."

³ In the Henry Holt and Company edition of Doyle, Henry Fleet is called Henry Clay, probably a typographical error.

He was a member of the Assembly in 1638, as was his brother Edward who accompanied him in 1631 to the Falls of the Potomac, and also two other brothers, John, and Reynold or Rainold. When the troubles growing out of the civil war in England began, Fleet moved to Virginia, and in December, 1652, he was a member of the Virginia Legislature, and in 1654 was appointed interpreter for a proposed expedition against the Indians. Fleet's Point, which appears on the U. S. Coast Survey Map of 1860, between the 37th and 38th degrees of latitude, probably indicates where he once dwelt. In 1665 Captain Fleet's house was a stopping place for travellers, and for improper conduct there, a Mr. Carline and a woman servant from Maryland were tried by the Rappahanock Court, and the former was fined, and the latter was ordered to have thirty lashes.¹

GEORGE EVELYN.

Robert Evelyn, of Godstone, on the 18th of March, 1590, at St. Peter's, Tower Hill, London, married Susanna, daughter of Gregory Young, of London, who was about twenty years of age. Their son George was born, in London, on the 31st of January, 1582-3, and on the 24th of October, 1620, entered as a student at Middle

¹ See Hanson's "Kent County, Maryland."

Temple, and afterward married Jane, daughter of Richard Crane, of Dorset. His brother, Robert,¹ with his uncle, Capt. Thomas Young, in the summer of 1634, explored the Delaware River as far as the falls. In December, 1634, Robert sailed for England, bearing letters from Governor Harvey, of Virginia, and did not return until about the year 1637, having been appointed Surveyor General of Virginia, in the place of Gabriel Hawley, deceased.

His brother, George, about this time arrived at Kent Island as the agent of a firm of London merchants. At first he slightly spoke of Governor Calvert and asked these questions: "Who was his grand father but a grazier? What was his father? What was Leonard Calvert himself at school but a dunce and blockhead?" But soon he became a supporter of Lord Baltimore, and an opponent of Clayborne, for whom he had professed friendship, and by a power of attorney from the London firm took possession of their property, which had been held by Clayborne.

After the avowal of friendship to the Proprietary he was commissioned in November, 1637 as "The first commander of Kent Island," and was a prominent member of the Assembly which convened on the following January. At Piney Point on the Potomac he obtained a grant of three hundred acres called the "Manor of Evelinton," and on April 3, 1638, entered lands for Daniel Wickliff, Randall Revell, Thomas Hebdan and other persons.² The next month he assigned all interest in the Manor "to his dear brother Robert Evelyn," and went to Virginia and from thence to England.

¹ His father, also Robert, is said in the "Evelyns of America," to have visited Virginia, before A. D. 1610, and to have subscribed seventeen pounds as an Adventurer of the Virginia Company, of London.

² "Founders of Maryland," p. 51.

His cousin John Evelyn, the author of "Sylva" in his Diary under date of 26th of February 1649, writes: "Come to see me, Captain George Evelyn my kinsman, the great traveller and one who believed himself a better architect than really he was, witness the portico in the garden at Wotton; yet the great room at Albury is somewhat better understood. He had a large mind but he overbuilt everything." Under the date of 8th of June, 1653, is this entry: "Came my brother George, Capt. Evelyn the greate traveller," and some others whose names we omit.²

In 1653 Captain George Evelyn furnished a design for a Doric portico which was built in front of the hill at Wotton. In the central niche was a stone statue of Venus holding a dolphin out of whose mouth ran water, which still exists in a good state of preservation.³

In 1649 George Evelyn purchased lands in James City County, Virginia, which on the 28th of April, 1650, he gave to his second son Mountjoy. The wife of Col. Daniel Parke, the ancestor of late G. W. Parke Custis, of Arlington, Va., was a Miss Evelyn, and his daughter Lucy married Col. William Byrd, and part of the Byrd estate at Westover, on the James River, Va., was called Evelington.⁴

¹ Streeter's "First Commander of Kent Island," p. 43.

² "Evelyn's Diary," Bolin Edition, 1863, vol. I, pp. 257-298.

³ Scull's "Evelyns in America," p. 357.

⁴ Scull, p. 3.

VII.

BALTIMORE'S DISPUTE WITH JESUIT MISSIONARIES.

The Jesuit missionaries, in disregard of the common law of England,¹ and without consulting the Proprietor of the Province, had obtained lands from the Indians, and also under the terms of the Proprietary law entered thousands of acres for the use of the Society of Jesus. Lord Baltimore saw that if this course was to continue he would incur the displeasure of England, and perhaps have his charter revoked. He therefore appointed John Lewger, his college friend, once a clergyman of the Church of England but at that time a Roman Catholic, Secretary of the Province, with instructions to correct the abuses of the Jesuit Fathers.

Upon his arrival in Maryland Lewger made known the wishes of Lord Baltimore, and "insisted that all grants of the land should be vacated, whether from the Indians or from the Proprietary, to Thomas Copley, who held the land for the use of the Society." He also had laws passed asserting the supremacy of the General Assembly in matters temporal, and the regulation of marriage. The Fathers resisted the Proprietor, and wrote to Father Henry More, who immediately appealed to the Propaganda, and in his Memorial to the Cardinal Prefect uses this language: "The Fathers of this Society warmly resisted this foul attempt, professing themselves ready to shed their blood in defence of the faith and liberty of the church, which firmness greatly enraged the Secretary [Lewger], who immediately reported to Baron Baltimore that his jurisdiction was interrupted by the Fathers of the Society, whose doctrine was inconsistent with the government of the Province. Hence the said Baron being offended, became alienated in his mind from the Fathers of the Society of Jesus, and at first, ipso facto, seized all their lands and let them, to others, as though he was the Lord and Proprietor of them. * * * * * The said Baron, with others favorable to his opinions, began to turn his attention to the expulsion of the Fathers and the introducing others in their stead, who would be more pliable to his Secretary. Therefore he proceeded next year to petition the Sacred Congregation of the Propagation of the Faith in the name of the Catholics of Maryland, to grant a prefect and priests of the secular clergy faculties for the same mission. * * * * * But the Sacred Congregation being entirely ignorant of these matters, granted the petition, and in the month of August, 1641, faculties were expedited from the Sacred Congregation, and were transmitted to Dom Rosetti, now Archbishop of Tarsus. But since, either the Prefect is not as yet appointed, or the faculties delivered, but are as yet, it is hoped, in the hands of Father Phillips, the confessor of the Queen of England, the Provincial humbly begs of your Eminence to deign to direct that the said faculties may be repealed if the matter is yet entire, or if by chance the faculties are delivered, that the departure of new priests may be retarded for so long as to allow the Holy See to decide upon what is best for the good of souls.

¹ Johnson, p. 62.

"The Fathers do not refuse to make way for other labourers, but they humbly submit for consideration whether it is expedient to remove those who first entered into that vineyard, at their own expense, who for seven years have endured want and sufferings, who have lost four of their own confreres laboring faithfully unto death."

In September, 1642, two priests in England desired to join the Maryland mission, but Baltimore declared that "he could not in prudence allow them to go unless an agreement was first made." On the 5th of October, Baltimore's sister, the wife of William Peasley, wrote: "I have been with my brother, but he is inexorable until all conditions be agreed upon by you."

It had been agreed by the Provincial of the Society of Jesus in England,¹ among other points, "that no Jesuit shall be sent to Maryland without the license of the said Lord Baltimore and his heirs having been first obtained." It was also agreed in this language: "Since it is sufficiently clear that Maryland depends upon England, that it could not support itself unless they frequently sent over supplies of necessaries, and since it is not the less evident that those privileges, exemptions, etc., which are usually granted to ecclesiastical persons of the Roman Catholic Church by Catholic princes in their own countries, could possibly be granted here without grave offence to the King and State of England, - which offence, however, may be called a hazard both to the said Baron and especially the whole colony. Therefore none of our said Society shall apply by any spiritual authority, or in any other manner demand or require from the said Baron, or heirs, or any of the officials in Maryland, any privileges, exemptions, etc., in temporal matters except, such as are publicly granted to the Society, or the Roman Church in England."

¹ This Memorial was first published in full in Foley's "Records of the English Province of the Society of Jesus," London, Burns & Oates, 1878. In 1881 it was republished by Neill as an appendix to an article in vol. V of "Pennsylvania Historical Society Magazine." It also appears in Bradley T. Johnson's "Foundation of Maryland," published in 1883 by the Maryland Historical Society.

² For Form of Agreement see page 90 of Johnson's "Foundation of Maryland."

The Jesuits intending to go to Maryland assented to these conditions and sailed, and Father White, in his Relation, has told us how far they observed them. He writes: "When our people declared it to be repugnant to the laws of the Church, two priests were sent from England who might teach the contrary, but the reverse of what was expected happened; for our reasons being heard, and the thing itself being more clearly understood, they easily fell in with our opinion."

VIII.

THE ACT OF 1649, CONCERNING RELIGION.

The conflict of opinion between the Maryland Jesuits and Lord Baltimore was injurious to the interests of the Proprietor. The fact that the Jesuits held themselves above the laws of England, not only retarded immigration to the Province, but led to serious political complications. The members of the House of Commons on the 10th of December, 1641, presented an address¹ to Charles the First at Hampton Court, in which they complained that he had permitted another State moulded within this State; independent in government; contrary in interest and affection, secretly corrupting the ignorant or negligent professors of religion."

Lord Baltimore after this began to enlist Puritan influence to increase the population of the Province. Governor Winthrop of Massachusetts on the 13th of October, 1643, writes in his journal: "The Lord Baltimore, owner of much land in Virginia, being himself a Papist, and his brother, Mr. Calvert, the Governor there, being a Papist also, but the colony consisting of both Protestant and Papist, he wrote a letter to Capt. Gibbons, of Boston, and sent a commission, wherein he made a tender of land in Maryland to any of ours that would transport themselves thither, with free liberty of religion and all the privileges which the place affords, paying such rent as should be agreed upon; but our Captain had no mind to further his desire, even had any of our people temptation that way."

The agitation for toleration in worship began to increase in England.² In a work called the "Compassionate Samaritan" it was requested "that the

¹ Rushworth

² Lord Robert Brooke, who fell in battle in 1643 at Litchfield, in his "Treatise on Episcopacy," wrote: "I must confess I begin to think there may be something more of God in these sects which they call new schisms than appear at first glances."

John Milton, in his speech for the liberty of unlicensed printing, in 1645, addressed to Parliament, uses these words: "Ye know him I am sure; yet I for honor's sake, and may it be eternal to him, shall name him the Lord Brooke, He, wrting of Episcopacy, and by the way treating of sects and schisms. . . . He there exhorts us to bear with patience and humility those, however they may be mislled that desire to live purely in such a use of God's ordinances as the best guidance of their conscience gives them, and to tolerate them, though in some disconformity to ourselves."

Parliament will stop all proceedings against them, and for future provide that, as well particular and private congregations, as public, may have public protection, that all statutes against the Separatists be reviewed and repealed; and that the Press may be free for any man that submits nothing scandalous and dangerous to the State; that this Parliament prove themselves loving fathers to all good men, bearing respect unto all, and so inviting an equal assistance and affection from all."

On the last day of January, 1643-4, three clergymen in the Bermudas, N. White, W. Golding and the aged Patrick Copland, withdrew from the Church of England. White before coming to the island had been a zealot for all the ceremonies of the Church. Golding was possessed of a good library, and Copland, or Copeland, was the friend of Nicholas Ferrar, the gentle ritualist of Little Gidding, though widely differing as to church ceremonies. Through Ferrar's influence he went, in 1626, to the Bermudas.²

White soon proceeded to England to confer with Copland's friend the Earl of Warwick, and on the 24th of October, 1645, the House of Commons ordered that there should be liberty of conscience in the Bermudas or Somer Islands, and that the Committee of Lords and Commons for Plantations should see that it was executed. On the 4th day of November this Committee¹ issued a declaration which after recounting that certain persons in Bermudas or Somer Islands did petition that “they, with others which shall join themselves unto them in matters of worship, might by the Parliament’s assent and authority be freed from all molestation or trouble for any ceremony and imposition in matters of God’s worship, either in those parts of America where now they are, or hereafter, may be planted,” mentioned the order of the 24th of October of the House of Commons. The following proclamation is then made:

¹ Quoted in "Dipper Dipped," by Daniel Featley, D.D., London, 1651. Featley died in April 1645.

² For a full notice of Copland, or Copeland, see "Founders of Maryland," Munsell, 1876, pp. 111-115, also Neill's "English Colonization of America," London, 1871, pp. 161-181.

“Now know all manner of persons that this may concern, that we, the said Robert Earl of Warwick, Governor in Chief and Lord High Admiral of all those Islands, together with the said Commissioners whose names with our seals are hereto subscribed and added, according to the said petition, and in pursuance of the said order of Parliament, duly considering the justice and equity of the premises, as also the great hindrance of the so much to be desired propagation of the Gospel of Jesus Christ in the purity thereof in all parts of the world, * * * do by these presents grant unto the said petitioners and to all others that do or shall hereafter inhabit or abide in those parts of the world that shall join with them * * * protection, immunity and freedom from all trouble and molestation by and for any ceremony or imposition in the

¹ The Committee were:—
Lords Warwick,
Pembroke,
Manchester,
Say and Seale,
P. Wharton,

Arth. Haslerigg,
Ben. Rydiard,
H. Vayne,
Cornelius Holland,
Myles Corbett.

matter of God's worship, and do hereby require all the Governors * * * * and all the inhabitants whatsoever within the ports and throughout the coast of America, as aforesaid, to suffer them quietly, freely and peaceably to worship God accordingly in those Islands, and also in all other parts and throughout the coasts of America as aforesaid. And if in case they shall at any time or times hereafter think fit to remove or transplant themselves or their habitations, or any of their goods or estates, to any other part of America, not only for to suffer and permit them, with all that is theirs, so to do without let or disturbance, but also to afford them all necessary aid, help and assistance therein, as they will answer the contrary and the high contempt of the power and authority of Parliament aforesaid."¹

In 1646 Governor Sayle, of Bermudas, and the clergyman Golding, by way of Boston, went to England in the interests of a free church.

On his way Sayle invited the Planters of James River, Virginia, whose pastor was formerly Governor Berkeley's chaplain, the Rev. Thomas Harrison, to unite with them in a settlement on an isle of the sea. On November 2d, 1646, by the hands of the same Captain Edward Gibbons that in 1643 had borne Lord Baltimore's letter, he sent a note to Governor Winthrop, in which he wrote: "Had your proposition found us risen up, in a posture of removal, there is weight and force enough [in yours] to have stricken us down again." It is possible that Winthrop, of Boston, may have proposed that Harrison and his church members should settle in Maryland, instead of starting to a distant island.¹

¹ For the full text see Lefroy's "Bermudas," vol. 1, pp. 601-603.

About the time that Governor Sayle² reached London, on the 24th of November, 1646, the Plantation Commissioners reported to Parliament: "That Lord Baltimore had wickedly broken his trust, and asked that they might be authorized to appoint the Governor and other officers of Maryland." In the language of Charles the Second, then an exile at Breda, in a commission appointing Sir William Devenant Governor of Maryland, Baltimore "did visibly adhere to the rebels of England," from this time until the restoration. To serve his interests in Maryland he was willing to remove Roman Catholics and appoint a Governor and other officers who would be pleasing to Parliament. His consultations were frequent with the men in power.

A daughter of Christopher Wandesforde, whose father had been a confidential adviser of the Earl of Strafford, and his successor as Deputy of Ireland, writes in her autobiography³ that a meeting was held at her uncle's house in London, of the Close

1 In London, A. D. 1647, a treatise was published by Samuel Richardson with this title: "The Necessity of Toleration in Matters of Religion; or, Certain Questions propounded to the Synod tending to prove that Corporal Punishment ought not to be inflicted upon such as hold errors in Religion and that in matters of Religion men ought not to be compelled, but have Liberty and Freedom."

2 Sayle in 1647 succeeded in forming a company in London for the settling of one of the Bahamas Islands, with entire liberty of conscience for each settler. In October, 1647, he returned to Bermuda and said, "they had toleration in England, and that in the city of London the Episcopal ministers did preach, the Presbyterians did teach, and the Independents did teach, and where the Presbyterians taught he could ever find above a half score of people, but all the rest constantly full." (See Lefroy's "Bermudas," vol. I, p. 630.)

Sayle went to the Isle Eleuthera in 1649, with the aged Copland and others, and established a free church, but the settlement was unsuccessful. (See "A Chapter of American Church History," in the "New Englander," New Haven, Ct., July, 1879.) In July, 1669, Sayle was commissioned as Governor of Carolina. In the constitution prepared by John Locke, the philosopher, it was provided "that any seven or more persons agreeing in any religion shall institute a church or profession, to which they shall give some name to distinguish it from others."

3 Camden Society Publication.

Committee of Parliament to consult about the King's trial, and her uncle told her that Mr. Rushworth, another of the collectors of Parliament, came to him some days before the said consult, and desired the liberty of a large room in his house for that day: to give him the key of the door, that he and his company might privately pass and repass without molestation.' The company came in the morning, but not together, but one after another, and were about a dozen. He saw several disguised faces, particularly, he knew the Lord Baltimore * * * and others suspected to be Papists or fanatics, which strange mixture did much surprise him."

Harrison, the Virginian clergymen who had corresponded with Winthrop, was in London in 1648, the year when Lord Baltimore conceded to the suggestion of the Parliament Committee on Plantations, and to conciliate different parties removed the Roman Catholic Governor Green, and appointed William Stone, of Hungars Neck, on Eastern Shore of Virginia, nephew of Thomas Stone, haberdasher, of London, and brother-in-law of Francis Doughty, a Protestant clergyman, and in his commission is found for the first time the pledge "not to disturb any person professing to believe in Jesus Christ merely for or in respect of his or her religion or the free exercise thereof."¹

¹ Francis Doughty was the son of a Bristol Alderman, and is supposed to have been the Vicar of Godberry, Gloucester, who was arraigned for speaking of the King as "Charles by common election and general consent, King of England." In 1639 he came to Massachusetts, and subsequently preached to the English-speaking members of the Reformed church in Manhattan (i.e. now New York City). He then preached in Lower Accomac, where Stone resided. In 1650 he resided in Maryland. At one time he preached in Settlebourne parish, Virginia, about ten miles from the plantation of John Wasington, the immigrant, and while there it was complained that he was a non-conformist," and that on one occasion "he denied the supremacy of the King contrary to the canons of the Church of England."Neill's "Virginia Colonial Clergy," Philadelphia, 1877, pp. 16-17.

Hammond, a friend of Lord Baltimore, writes as to the Puritan immigration from Virginia, showing that conferences and correspondence had been held with Lord Baltimore and his deputies after the Virginia Legislature of 1647 had expelled Non-conformists. His words are : "Maryland is counted by them as a refuge; the Lord Proprietor and his Government solicited to, and several addresses and treaties¹ made for their admittance and entertainment in that Province. * * * Their propositions were hearkened to and agreed on, which was that they should have convenient portions of land assigned them, and liberty of conscience, and privilege to choose their own officers, and hold court within themselves.

"An Assembly was called throughout the whole country, after their coming over, consisting as well of themselves as the rest, and because there were some few Papists that first inhabited, these, themselves and others being of different judgement, an act was passed that all professing in Jesus Christ should have equal justice." This writer also mentions, that at the request of the Virginia Puritians "the oath of fidelity was overhauled and this clause added to it, provided it infringe not the liberty of conscience."²

The act concerning Religion, in April 1649, by the Maryland Assembly,³ was not approved by Lord Baltimore for more than a year. In the Record Book is the following note appended, signed Philip Cal-

¹ "Leah and Rachel," London, 1656.

² In "Description of New Albion," printed in 1648, Plowden, who had recently visited the Puritans in Virginia anticipated the ideas of the Act of 1649 by proposing:

1. An Act to settle and establish the fundamentals of Christianity.

2. To punish for contempt, such as "bitter, rail and condemn others."

3. To act in mildness, love, and charity, and gentle language, vert. "An Act of Assembly, .21st April 1649, confirmed by the Lord Proprietor, by an instrument under his hand and seal, dated August 26th, 1650." Lord Baltimore, in his defence before Parliament, wrote: "Although those laws were assented unto by the Lord Baltimore in August, 1650, yet it appears, that some of them were enacted in Maryland by the Assembly there in April, 1649." In another place, referring to the laws of 1650, he uses these words. "It was one of those laws passed by the Assembly in Maryland in April, 1650, when the people there knew of the late King's death, a year after the other law above mentioned with divers others, which were enacted in April, 1649, as aforesaid, though in the ingrossment of them all here, when the Lord Baltimore gave his assent to them altogether, August, 1650, it was written before it because they were transposed here in such order as the Lord Baltimore thought fit, according to the nature, and more or less importance of them, placing the act concerning religion first."¹

The act was contrary to the teachings of the Church of Rome, since it recognized as Christians those who rejected the Pope. During the year 1649 the zealous Philip Fisher, who had been, in 1646, carried to England, was again in the Province, and when the Assembly of 1650 met there was an expression of dissatisfaction with the act.

¹ Blome in his "Britannia," published in 1653, at London, mentions Lord Baltimore as one of his subscribers, and he asserts that "His Lordship by Advice of the General Assembly of the Province, hath long since established a model of good and wholesome laws, with toleration of religion, to all such that profess faith in Christ."

"Lord Baltimore's Case," printed in 1653 uses these words: "As that by general consent of the Protestants, as well as Roman Catholics it is established by a law thereas well as freedom of conscience and exercise of religion within that Province is to all that profess to believe in Jesus Christ."

The burgesses of that year were: John Hatch and Walter Blane, of St. Georges; John Medley, William Brough and Robert Robins, of Newtown; Philip Land and Francis Brooks, of St. Marys; Thomas Matthews, of St. Inigos; Thomas Sterman and George Manners, of St. Michaels; Francis Posey, of St. Clements; James Cox and George Puddington, Ann Arundel; Robert Vaughan, Isle of Kent.

When the delegates were to be sworn, all the Roman Catholics, four in number, objected to the principles of the act concerning Religion, passed the year before. Medley, Manners and Land thought it was not right to issue a perpetual law upon the subject, but Thomas Matthews, who came from the precinct where Father Fisher now lived, told the Assembly he could not take the oath of toleration, "as he wished to be guided in matters of conscience by spiritual counsel."¹ He was therefore condemned and expelled, and Cuthbert Fenwick, formerly the servant, and afterward the agent of Thomas Cornwallis, was returned in his place.

After Lord Baltimore, in 1650, assented to the Act of 1649 concerning religion he professed fidelity to the Commonwealth, and incensed² Charles, in exile at Breda. Doyle, in "English Colonies in America,"³ writes, perhaps too severely: "Two years later Baltimore fairly cut himself adrift from the party which had hitherto commanded his allegiance. In August, 1652, he published a manifesto setting forth the various reasons against uniting Maryland to Virginia. The document is in every way a remarkable one. The arguments against the union are set forth with consummate ingenuity, and it must be said with some shamelessness. The son of a royal favorite, he who owed all his worldly position to court patronage, did not shrink from pleading the fidelity of his colony to the Commonwealth, and contrasting it with the stubborn royalism of Virginia. 'It would much reflect upon the honor of the Parliament, if he should become a laughing stock to his enemies for his fidelity to the Commonwealth.' Maryland, he went on to urge, might serve in time of trouble as a refuge for the distressed Puritans from Virginia."¹ IX.

¹ Maryland MSS.

² After the passage of the Act of 1649, Charles, in exile at Breda, gave to the poet Davenant a commission as Governor of Maryland. It begins with this sentence: "Whereas the Lord Baltimore, Proprietor of the Province and Plantation of Maryland, in America, doth visibly adhere to the rebels of England, and admits all kinds of schismatics and sectaries, and other ill affected persons into the said Plantation of Maryland, so that we have cause to apprehend very great prejudice to our service thereby." See "Founders of Maryland," page 126. The commission in full is printed in Appendix, pp. 113, 114, "Virginia Boundary Commissioners' Report," Richmond, 1873.

³ "New York Edition," Henry Holt and Company, pp. 310-311.

THE JESUIT MISSION.

The Superior of the Jesuit Mission in Maryland in a report for the year 1693 mentions "that intercourse with the Indians was less than could be wished, nor have Ours established any fixed mission to them."²

Sixty years before this was written the first Jesuits left England, and in 1634 arrived in the Province.

¹ "The Lord Baltimore's Case" was printed in London in 1653. It was reprinted in the Appendix to "Report of Virginia Commissioners on Boundary Line between Maryland and Virginia," Richmond, 1873.

² The facts of this chapter are largely taken from Foley's "Records of English Jesuits," and Oliver's "Biography."

They were Fathers Andrew White, Philip Fisher, John Gravener, alias Altham, Timothy Hays, alias Hammer, and a temporal coadjutor, Thomas Ger-vase.

ANDREW WHITE was born in London about 1579, and was educated at Douay. After being engaged in England as a missionary for some time, he became a professor in Jesuit Colleges in Spain and also at Louvan and Liege. With Fisher he was carried from Maryland in 1645 by Captain Ingle to England. There he was tried and found guilty of teaching doctrines contrary to the statutes, but on the 4th of July, 1646, judgment was stayed. After remaining in Newgate prison eighteen months, on the 7th of January, 1648, O. S., the House of Commons "did concur with the Lords in granting the petition of Andrew White, a Jesuit, who was brought out of America, into the kingdom by force, upon an English ship," and ordered him to be discharged, provided he left the kingdom within fifteen days.¹ In accordance with this order he left England; but after a prolonged absence returned to England, where he died on the 27th of December, 1656, nearly eighty years of age.²

PHILIP FISHER was born in Madrid, Spain, in 1595-6, entered the order in 1616-17, and in 1636 was Superior of the Maryland Mission. With White, he was in 1646, taken to England by Ingle, for violating the law relating to ecclesiastics.

After being confined for some time in Newgate Prison, by the influence of Secretary Windebank,

¹ "House of Commons Journal."

² Oliver's "Biography of Jesuits."

he was released, and harbored, until he found an opportunity to go to America. His hopeful letter, upon returning to Maryland, addressed to Caraffa, General of the Jesuits, and dated March 1st, 1648, O. S., is worthy of preservation, and is as follows :

"At length my companion and myself reached Virginia in the month of January, after a terrible journey of seven weeks. There I left my companion and awaited myself of the opportunity of proceeding to Maryland, where I arrived in the month of February. By the singular Providence of God, I found my flock collected together after they had been scattered these three long years, and they were really in more flourishing circumstances than those who had oppressed them. With what joy they received me, and with what delight I met them, it would be impossible to describe, but they received me as an angel of God. I have been with them a fortnight, and am preparing for a painful separation, for the Indians summon me to their aid, and they have been ill-treated by the enemy since I was torn from them. I scarcely know what to do, but cannot attend to all. God grant that I may do his will to the greater glory of his name. Truly flowers appear in our land, may they attain to fruit.

"A road by land through the forest has just been opened from Maryland to Virginia. This will make it but a two days' journey, and both countries can be united in one mission. After Easter, I shall wait upon the Governor of Virginia on important business. May it terminate to the praise and glory of God. My companion, I trust, still lies concealed :

but next year I hope to have two or more colleagues, with the permission of your fraternity, to whose prayers and sacrifices I earnestly commend this mission, myself, and all mine." In the year 1652 he died.

JOHN GRAVENER, alias Altham, was born in Warwickshire in 1589, entered the Society of Jesuits in 1624, and on November 5, 1640, died of fever at Saint Mary.

TIMOTHY HAYES, alias Hammer, was born in Dorsetshire, and before 1636 had returned to England.

THOMAS GERVASE, a temporal coadjutor, was born in Derbyshire in 1590, and in 1624 entered the Society. He, with Gravener and Fisher, was in 1627 at Clerkenwell College. He died in Maryland late in the summer of 1637 of fever.

JOHN ROGERS, born at Frome, in Somersetshire, in 1584, the son of Protestant parents, and for a time a student at Oriel College, Oxford, having been converted to the Church of Rome, entered the Society in 1624; came to Maryland about 1636, and before 1638 returned to England.

During the year 1637 the Mission was strengthened by the arrival of Copley and Knowles.

THOMAS COPLEY was the grandson of Thomas Copley, who fled to Paris during Queen Elizabeth's reign, and was knighted by the King of France. His father, William, married Margaretta Prideaux, who had been educated under her aunt, a prioress of Louvain. He was the eldest son, and educated at Louvain. In the Calendar of British State Papers under date of December 1, 1634, Thomas Copley, in a petition to the King states that he is an alien born, and therefore believes he is not liable to trouble for his religion, by the laws of the realm, yet fearing he may be molested by some messengers while following occasions which concern his father's and his own estate, prays his Majesty to refer his petition to one of the principal Secretaries. On the 10th of the month a warrant of protection was issued¹ under the King's seal. He arrived in Maryland on the 8th of August, 1637, and was a valuable temporal co-adjutor, and held lands as Thomas Copley, Esq., for the use of the Society. Among the Land Office memoranda is the following: "Thomas Copley, Esq., demandeth 4,000 acres of land due by conditions of plantations, for transporting into this Province himself, and twenty able men at his own charge to plant and inhabit in the year 1637." A few months later it is recorded that there has been "shipped in the St. Margaret for Thomas Copley, Esq., cloth, hatchets, knives, hoes, to trade with the Indians for beaver." On the 13th of May, 1638, there was also entered "for Mr. Thomas Copley, one hundred weight of beaver, traded for with the Indians." He was living in 1650, but the time of his death has not been ascertained.

JOHN KNOWLES, who came in the same vessel with Copley, was born in Staffordshire in 1607, and entered the Society in 1634. In about six weeks after his arrival in Maryland he died.

Two more missionaries, Poulton and Morley, arrived in 1638.

FERDINAND POULTON, alias John Brock or Brookes, was born in Buckinghamshire about 1630, and on the 5th of July, 1641, he was accidentally shot, while crossing the river, near St. Mary.

¹ Copy of the warrant is in "Founders of Maryland," Munsell, 1879, p. 92.

WALTER MORLEY was born in 1591 at London, educated at Rome, and died in Maryland on the 6th of March, 1641, a few months before Poulton. He was a temporal co-adjutor.

In the Jesuits reports it is mentioned that in 1642 the only missionaries in Maryland were White, Fisher and Rigby; Gervase, Gravener, Poulton, and Morley¹ had died, while Hays and Rogers had returned to England.

In 1644 one known as FATHER BERNARD HARKWELL, or Hartwell, had joined the mission and acted as Superior.

JOHN COOPER came about the same time, was born in Hants, A. D., 1600, entered the Society in 1632. He was taken prisoner with White and Fisher, and in 1646 died in Virginia. From A.D. 1645 to 1648, there were no Jesuit priests in Maryland.

¹ Foley, in part 7th of "Records of English Jesuits," mentions Henry Morley, alias Lawrence Rigby who came to Maryland, but left the Society of Jesus, in 1648. Shea in "History of Catholic Missions," writes that Father Roger Rigby, born in Lancashire in 1608, entered the Society at 21 years of age; came to Maryland about 1640; carried to Virginia and died.

1 Dec 1888

INDEX.

- Act of 1649 concerning religion, 37.
 opposed by Roman catholics, 46.
 Alexander, Sir William, 5.
 Anacostan Indians, 29.
 Ark. the ship detained, 8, 11.
 Arundel, of Wardour, 8.
 Avalon, charter of 5.
 Baltimore, Lord first, see Calvert George.
 Baltimore, Lord second, see Calvert Cecil.
 Barbadoes, charter of, 5.
 Bermudas, non-conformists, 39.
 "Black George," ship leaks, 27.
 Blackman, Capt., receives deer, 28.
 Blane Walter, 46.
 Blome, on toleration act, 45.
 Blount, father Richard S. J., 5, 10.
 Books, earliest on Maryland, 15.
 Brent, Margaret 16.
 Brick offered by Gov. Harvey, 14.
 Brick made in Maryland, 25.
 Brickmaker, early, 25.
 Brome Hall, Suffolk, 16.
 Brooke, Francis, 46.
 Brooke, Lord, on toleration, 38.
 Brongh, William, 46.
 Byrd, Col. of Westover, Va., 33.
 Calvert, George, 1st Lord Baltimore, 6.
 Calvert, Cecil, 2d Lord Baltimore, 7, 9; poor, 7, 8; arrangements with Jesuits, 10; criticised, 21, 46; wishes to expel Jesuits, 35; censured by Charles 2d, 12, 46; alleged fidelity to Parliament, 43, 46.
 Calvert, Leonard, Gov. embarkation 11; plants a cross, 15; poverty of, 16; criticism on, 16, 32; flees to Virginia, 23.
 Canada, Cornelius, an early brick-maker, 25.
 Cardinal Manning, error of, 11.
 Carlisle Earl, charter of, 5.
 Carolana, charter of, 5.
 Catholics Roman, few, 12, 14, 44.
 Catholics Protestant, many, 12, 14.
 Chalmers, George, lawyer, 6.
 Charter of Avalon, of Barbadoes, of Carolana, of Maryland, 5.
 Clayborne, William, 30, 32.
 Cooper, John, Jesuit, noticed, 52.
 Copley, Thomas, Jesuit, noticed, 50.
 Cornwallis, Thomas, 11; ancestry of, 16, 17; his prominence, 18, 19; house described, 18, 23; assists Capt. Ingle, 23; is fined for sympathy with Ingle, 23; marriage of, 25; death of, 25.
 Cornwallis, Rev. Thomas, 25.
 Custis, G. W. P., 33.
 Davenant, the poet, commissioned as Gov. of Md., 4, 46.
 Deer for King Charles, 28.
 Dove, the pinnace, 8, 11.
 Doyle, on Md. Charter, 7, on Lord Baltimore, 20, 46.
 Evelyn, George, ancestry of, 31; commander of Kent, Island, 32; architect and traveler, 33.
 Evelyn, John, cousin of George, 33; diary of, 33.
 Evelyn, Robert, brother of George, 32; explores Delaware river, father of George, 31, 32.
 Evelyn, Mountjoy, son of George, 33.
 Faith of the Colonists, 11.
 Fenwick, Cuthbert, 46.
 Ferrar, Rev. Nicholas, 39.
 Fisher, Philip, Jesuit missionary, noticed, 48, 49.
 Fleet, Edward, son of Henry, 31.
 Fleet, John, son of Henry, 31.
 Fleet, Reynold, son of Henry, 31.

- Fleet, Henry, Protestant, 15; early trader, 29; captured by Indians, 30; factor of Warwick, 30; at Falls of Potomac, 30; in Md. Assembly, 31; in Va. Assembly, 31.
- Gardiner's error as to Md. charter 5; as to Holy church, 22.
- Gerrard, Richard, notice of, 13.
- Gerrard, Surgeon, 29.
- Gervase, Thomas, Jesuit missionary, noticed, 50.
- Gibbons, Capt. Edward, 38, 41.
- Gravener, John, Jesuit missionary, noticed, 50.
- Hammond, on Puritan immigration 44.
- Harrison, Rev. Thomas, 41, 42.
- Harvey, Gov. of Va., 14, 27, 30.
- Hawley, Gabriel, 27.
- Hawley, Gov. of Barbadoes, 21.
- Hawley, James, 21.
- Hawley, Jerome, early life, 21.
- Hawley, Jerome, notice of, 25, 28.
- Hawley, William, brother of Jerome, 21.
- Hayes, Timothy, Jesuit Missionary, noticed, 50.
- Hebden, Thomas, 32.
- Hill, Edward, 30.
- Holy Church, meaning of, 21, 22.
- Ingle, Capt. Richard, 22, 23, 24.
- Jesuit missions to Indians, 47.
- Jesuit controversy with Baltimore, 34, 37.
- Jesuit missionaries, notices of, 47, 52.
- Johnson, Bradley T. essay of, 11, 14.
- Knowles, John, Jesuit missionary, noticed 51.
- Land, Philip, 46.
- Land, Archbishop, 27.
- Lewger, John, Secretary, 12, 13, 29.
- Lewger, John, offends Jesuits, 13.
- Lindsey, James, servant, 16.
- Manners, George, 46.
- Manning, Cardinal inaccurate, 11.
- Matthews, Thomas, 16.
- Maryland charter restrictive, 5, 6; opinions on, 6, 7.
- More, Henry, Vice Provincial, S. J., 12; censures Lewger, 12, 13; declares that Roman Catholics are few and poor, 12, 14.
- Morley, Walter, Jesuit missionary 52.
- Newport, Capt. plants a cross, 14.
- Northey, Sir Edward, on Md. charter, 6.
- Nova Scotia, charter of, 5.
- Oath, of allegiance, 8, 27.
- Oath of fidelity overhauled, 44.
- Paschatoway, 15.
- Penington, Admiral, 8.
- Peasley, William, 15, 36.
- Piscataquack, 30.
- Plowden on toleration, 44.
- Protestants, a large majority, 12, 14.
- Puritan immigration desired, 38, 44.
- Poulton, Ferdinand, Jesuit missionary, 51.
- Posey, Francis, 46.
- Puddington, George, 46.
- Revell, Randall.
- Rigby, Jesuit missionary.
- Robbins, Robert, 46.
- Rogers Jesuit missionary, 50.
- Roman Catholics, few and poor, 13, 14; oppose act of, 1649.
- Rosetti, Archbishop, 35.
- St. Mary, town site selected, 15.
- Salem, 30.
- Sayle, Governor, 41.
- Scharf, not acquainted with Jesuit records, 11.
- Snow, Abel, 29; Justinian, 28, 29; Marmaduke, 29; Susanna, 29.
- Strafford, Earl of, letters to 7, 9.
- Streeter, S. F. misapprehension of, 21.
- Toleration, Lord Brooke on, 38; Maryland, act of, 27; Milton on, 38; for Somer Island 39, 40; pamphlet by Richardson, 42; as expressed by Plowden, 44; proclamation of parliament, 41.
- Vaughan, Robert, 16.
- Warwick, earl of, on toleration, 41.
- Winthrop, Gov. 38, 41.
- White, father Andrew, noticed, 48.
- Young Thomas explores Delaware River, 32.

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

0 014 368 024 1